Question Numbers : (26 to 30)

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

For long, the enrolment of girls in the mechanical engineering programme has been a dismal 5-10% even among the top engineering universities in India. On the contrary, female enrolment in mechanical engineering in MIT, USA has gone up from 10% in 2006 to 49.5% in 2016. The perception in India is that it is a physically demanding sector, which involves cutting metal on machines and forging a piece of metal with heavy sledgehammers.

The mechanical engineering stream has changed drastically in the last couple of decades. Most modern plants employ computer-driven machines with increased automation on the shop floor. Labour-intensive processes have been replaced by machine-driven automatic control systems. Due to this, the job requirements and skills have also undergone transformation. The industry now requires engineers who are capable of designing complex mechanical systems using software tools.

As a result, workshop practicals in engineering institutions, such as filing pieces of metal, manual welding, and working on conventional lathes are being phased out of the syllabus. The emphasis today is more on providing workshop training on computer-controlled machines.
